Prologue

I grew up in a Indian middle-class family. The kind where you squeeze the toothpaste get to the last little bit, use the soap until it's so tiny it could evaporate and use the empty Bournvita jars for storing pulses and grains. In essence, we made sure wastage was minimal and went all out to repurpose any item before deeming it 'garbage.

Now an educated adult, I am rather glad and thankful for the upbringing my parents have given me. This mindset has made me more thankful for things bestowed to us. This is what this book is about. Celebrating the culture we all inherit.

There are uncountable events happening every day in life of middle-class people. Being in the family has its unique charm. we don't dream of having a luxury car, getting few extra pieces of paneer in our dish is good enough.

This book highlights the ironies and not so ordinary scenarios that runs in Indian families and in society through comics.
